The love of an animal is a precious and incredible thing; it is unconditional and full of acceptance. This powerful love is just one of the many reasons why losing a beloved animal companion can be devastating. The reality is that death can suck, especially the death of a treasured family member. This life-shifting, candid, and surprisingly humorous book by animal intuitive and healer Alexa Linton, is an exploration of how this inevitable transition can suck far less. Inside, she shares how developing effective and simple tools can build a strong foundation amidst challenges, how cultivating self-awareness can create transformation, and how changing our perspective around death and dying even a small amount can shift this experience, for both ourselves and our animals, in beautiful life-affirming ways. In essence, she shows us how to navigate this challenging transition as gracefully as humanly possible so we can get back to the important stuff: living our lives fully and with love and sharing it all with our favourite animals and people.
