Would you search across half a continent and for most of your life to find your one true love? Move to a wild, inhospitable country to live by your love's side? Would you kill for your love? Throughout these pages, you will find Canadians who risked all this and much more to live out their passions. They defied the law, the elements, society and even their own moral codes, all in the name of love. For some this brought a lifetime's worth of happiness, for others none at all. But each of these people has transcended time, as their stories have bought them the immortality of fame (and infamy).
